Profile Pictures, Virtual Backgrounds, and Proper Behavior in Online Classes

About four weeks have passed since the start of classes on Zoom on May 7, 2020. During this time, we have received reports of students not following the guidelines set by APU when joining their online classes. Please read this document carefully and double-check the guidelines released by the university to ensure you behave properly as befits an APU student.

1. Profile Pictures

In principle, your profile picture should be a picture of your own face, but you may choose to use another picture if it is both religiously and politically appropriate. Unfortunately, some students have used profile pictures that could be considered inappropriate. Please be considerate of your classmates and only use profile pictures that are appropriate for use in class.

2. Virtual Backgrounds

Only virtual backgrounds designated for use by APU should be used during class to ensure inappropriate images do not interfere with others' education and to prevent copyright issues.

3. Participants who are Not Registered for the Course

Online classes are convenient because they give you the change to attend class from home. On the other hand, some students have taken advantage of that convenience and are joining classes for which they have not registered. Classes content has been designed for the number of students who actually registered for the course. In addition, attending courses you have not registered may negatively affect the learning of students who actually registered for the course. For these reasons, please do not participate in classes you have not registered.

4. Proper Behavior on Zoom

Everyone in the online classroom should follow the rules and use Zoom appropriately. Unfortunately, we have received reports of using the annotation function to write on the screen during screen sharing without permission, using the chat function to talk privately with other students, people who are not enrolled in the class appearing on the Zoom screen, and so on. These kinds of disruptions violate other students' right to education and may be subject to penalties up to and including suspension. Please behave properly to protect the classroom environment.
